On iOS, I've seen the option to download a.pdf file without leaving the app. How does this work, and are other OS's just as capable? I would like to make a.pdf file with a number of sub-files that correspond to different files. I could do this manually, but I want to be able to open the.pdf file with a single click. But if I can't, maybe there's a simple way to do it easily on a Mac. The PDF file I want to create has a number of sub-files for different pages. These sub-files are larger than one page, so it's not a problem if I have to manually set the page breaks. In a PDF viewer I can see the pages as pages within the PDF. It would be nice to be able to read the pages. I've seen pdfmerge. That seems like it might do the job. But it's not free. Any free tools for this job? Bonus if it works with Macs. A: For MacOS a bit of googling found the pdfrewriter tool which can convert PDF files to plain text by using XSLT. For Windows, which was requested, this guy mentioned in a comment that a Windows developer on the reddit thread he linked to already has a.PDF app. But for common Windows tasks

It is known that the transmission of a high-frequency current in a microstrip-line is accompanied by unwanted radiation. This effect can be improved by an appropriate choice of substrate material, but small substrate thicknesses with a good dielectric loss are required for optimum radiation properties. DE-A-30 39 653 discloses a microstrip-line on a substrate, in which a lower ground plane is separated from an upper conductor plane by air, in such a way that the dielectric material of the substrate is between the conductor layers. The dielectric layer in this case is not used for insulation from the ground plane, but is designed to ensure that the substrate material has low thickness loss as well as good dielectric properties, at the same time as the substrate has a larger cross-section than the conductor lines. DE-A-197 21 509 also discloses a microstrip-line on a substrate, in which the spacing between the conductor and ground planes is greater than in known lines, in order to reduce the cross-section of the line. DE-A-22 33 944 also discloses a radio wave device with a microstrip-line on a substrate, in which the conductor layer is on a dielectric layer which is designed to have a dielectric constant of >8. This dielectric layer is separated from the lower ground plane by air. It is also known from WO 00/14228 that a microstrip-line can be formed on a substrate as well as a split-line via conductor in the substrate, in which the microstrip-line has a transmission line structure with a defined gap spacing and 1cb139a0ed
